

FOURTH QUARTER 2024

MAXIMUM GROWTH

In the fourth quarter, the U.S. continued to grow at a solid pace that beat expectations, activity in Europe remained weak with dispersion across countries, and China's challenges persisted. Meanwhile, most major central banks continued cutting policy rates, with the Federal Reserve signaling a more cautious approach to rate cuts moving forward in December. The U.S. election resulted in Donald Trump being elected President and a Republican sweep overall outcome. Fourth quarter asset class returns were mostly negative though this was overshadowed to a degree by ongoing gains in U.S. equities. Interest rates moved up across the curve most notably in the leadup to the U.S. election and after the December Fed meeting. This left broader fixed income indexes in negative territory for the quarter. U.S. equities drifted slightly upwards early on in the quarter and then responded favorably to the Republican sweep U.S. election outcome. However, equities began to fade in December with a dip lower following the Fed meeting. Outside the U.S., equities struggled with headwinds from a less-robust economic backdrop, some political uncertainty and additional policy risk (e.g., tariffs) from the U.S. election outcome.

We made one change in asset allocation in the quarter. In November, we added to our U.S. equities overweight and reduced developed ex-U.S. equities from equal-weight to underweight. This move reflected our expectation of a more supportive economic and corporate earnings backdrop in the U.S. relative to Europe, which is also more exposed to tariff risk. Currently, the portfolio has overweights across high yield fixed income, U.S. equities and emerging market equities, funded by underweights in developed ex-U.S. equities and natural resources. The portfolio ended the quarter with a slightly lower risk level than its strategic starting point (the strategic allocation is 100% risk assets).

The portfolio underperformed as benefits from tactical positioning were outweighed by drag from strategic positioning and fund implementation. Strategic positioning detracted from performance mainly due to real assets trailing global equities. Tactical positioning benefited performance given our underweight positioning in natural resources and our overweight positioning in U.S. equities. Our broader-based U.S. market factor tilt (TILT), our global listed infrastructure (NFRA) and our quality large cap U.S. equity (QLC) were the main detractors in terms of fund implementation, while our broader-based developed markets ex-U.S. factor tilt (TLTD) and our global quality real estate (GQRE) were the main contributors.
